CLASS COMMITTEE.

FRANCIS HENRY LINCOLN, Class Secretary.
ARTHUR BROOKS.
GEORGE COMBE MANN.

"We met and parted; but the few short hours
Which held our hearts in happy union here
Have thrown a fragrance o'er this life of ours,
Which sweet shall linger through each after year."

E. C. Clarke in the Advocate.

CLASSMATES:

I have included in these pages such items of your history as you have communicated to me since the last report in 1879. They should be read in connection with and as supplements to previous reports. That there should be less variety than in former reports is a natural result of steady work in chosen occupations.

Death has taken from us Homer, Tripp, and Law, of whom you will find suitable notices.

We have now reached our fifteenth year since graduation. We naturally look forward to the twentieth and twenty-fifth years; and unless the class should request me to do otherwise, I shall issue my next reports at intervals of five years, instead of three as heretofore.

FRANCIS HENRY LINCOLN,
Class Secretary.

He has engaged passage for Europe for July next, for an indefinite absence.

Was a member of the examining committee of the Boston Public Library for 1881.

Address: 296 Beacon Street, Boston.

*WILLIAM HOMER.

Born in Boston, November 7, 1844. Died at sea, on the voyage from Havre to New York, September 16, 1881.

The following sketch has been prepared for this report at the request of the Secretary, by one who had known him intimately since graduation : —

William Homer, the eldest son of Peter Thacher Homer, of Boston, and Caroline Bunker, the daughter of William J. Bunker, of New York, was born in Boston, November 7, 1844. His father was a merchant of the well-known firm of Adams, Homer & Co., and in 1840 he retired from business, making the summer residence of the family at Lancaster, while their winters were passed in Boston, and the early education of William was received in part at each place. At the age of eleven he entered the Mayhew public grammar school, and graduated at the age of thirteen with the honor of a Franklin medal. He then became a scholar at the public Latin School, Francis Gardner, head master, and was there fitted for college. He remained there five years, with the exception of a few months in Europe, and during this period received several prizes. He entered college at the age of eighteen, passing with credit through the examinations, and was never absent but one day from the duties of scholastic life. On graduating, he travelled during six months in Europe. He returned home for a short time, and went abroad again in April, 1868, to commence the study of architecture in Paris.

In 1872 he entered the office of Ware & Van Brunt, architects, in Boston; but soon abandoned his chosen profession, and during several years alternated between Europe and America, giving the summers to England and the Continent and the winters to his family and friends at home. He sailed from Havre for New York in September, 1881, though very feeble from consumption, hoping to reach his home; but died September 16, 1881, when the ship was within two or three days of New York, and, in accordance with the inflexible rules of the steamship company, he was buried at sea.

In private life he was happy as an affectionate son and brother and a steadfast friend. His education and good taste led him to an interest in several branches of art. In ceramics he was a skilful judge of what were the best specimens, and he greatly enjoyed his small and valuable collection. He liked athletic games, and engaged in them so far as his strength would permit; and in all public matters he took intelligent interest, yet only as a thinker, never as an actor. In conversation he was always agreeable, and at the class club dinners was bright and social, and could tell a good story exceedingly well. At the "Somerset," of which he was a member, he made himself liked and respected by both the younger and older men, and as a courteous gentleman he gave and received pleasure in general society. He had a high sense of honor, and was physically and mentally brave; and through the discomforts of a lingering illness he never complained, and it was the pallid face alone that told of his sufferings.

To this slight sketch of William Homer there need only to be added a few words, to the truth of which his classmates will give ready assent. There would seem to be nothing to regret of his years on earth except their short duration ; and his friends all know that head and heart were strong for endurance, and that unfailing patience and the quality called "pluck" were the ample if sad compensation for disability to more showy and extensive action.

CHARLES LORING JACKSON. Born 1847.

Professor of Chemistry at Harvard University.

Was appointed professor, September 1, 1881.

Since the last report he has published the following papers : —

"Parachlorbenzyl Compounds," with J. F. White, Proceedings of American Academy, 1879 ; "The Action of Bromine on Toluol and some of its Derivatives," with A. W. Field, id., 1879 ; "Orthobrombenzyl Compounds," with J. F. White, id., 1879 ; "Substituted Benzaldehyds," with J. F. White, id., 1880 ; "The Synthesis of Anthracene and Phenanthrene from Orthobrombenzylbromide," with J. F. White, id., 1880 ; "The Relative Chemical Activity of Certain Substituted Benzylbromides," id., 1881 ; "Substituted Benzyl Compounds," id., 1881 ; "On Certain Substances contained in Turmeric-Circumin," with A. E. Menke, id., 1882.

All of these were reprinted in Remsen's "American Chemical Journal" and in the "Berichte der Deutschen Chemischen Gesellschaft."

He has also published "Lecture Notes, Chemistry, I.," a small pamphlet, and has furnished the plan for the organic part of the new edition (1881) of Cooke's "Chemical Philosophy."

EDWARD JACKSON LOWELL. Born 1845.

He writes: —

"In June, 1879, I sailed for Europe with my family with the object of having my children learn German, and of learning it myself, and then having my children learn French. The first half of this plan has been successfully carried out, and the second is about half accomplished. For two years we made our headquarters at Dresden, in which city the children spent about twenty months, going to school with German children, and becoming entirely familiar with the language. My wife and I made excursions, but spent in all over twelve months in Dresden, and the whole family has passed a part of every summer at the baths of Homburg. In the autumn of 1881 we moved to Paris, where the two oldest children are at school. There we stayed six months, and are now in Florence with my younger boy. In addition to our stay in Dresden and Paris, my wife and I have seen something of Italy, Germany, Switzerland, and Holland. We hope to come home in about a year."

WILLIAM JAMES MORTON. Born 1845.

Physician in New York.

Was graduated from the Harvard Medical School in 1872.

After travel, study, and practice in Europe, Africa, and America, finally settled in New York in 1877, giving attention specially to diseases of the nervous system. Was assistant to the chair of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System in the University of New York.

Assistant editor to "Neurological Contributions," secretary for four years of the Neurological Society, now member of the New York Academy of Medicine, of the New York Academy of Sciences, of the New York Medico-Legal Society, of the New York County Medical Society, of the American Neurological Association, and of the American Academy of Medicine.

Three years ago was appointed Professor of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System in the University of Vermont, and gives an annual course of lectures in that school.

Is also physician to the Department of Nervous Diseases in the Metropolitan Throat Hospital, New York, where he has established a clinic, daily increasing in numbers and facilities for teaching.

Is editor and proprietor of the "Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease," a quarterly publication of nine years' existence, good circulation at home and abroad, and ranking first among such publications in this country.

Among a number of pamphlets published may be mentioned, "The Invention of Anæsthetic Inhalation; or, Discovery of Anæsthesia," a reply to Dr. J. Marion Sims, 1880; "The Toxic Effects of Tea; or, Tea Drinkers' Disorder," 1880; "On Statical Electro-Therapeutics; or, Treatment of Disease by Franklinism," 1881; "Anæsthetic Inhalation"; "The Town of Gheel in Belgium, and its Insane; or, Occupation and Reasonable Liberty for Lunatics," 1881; "A Visit to the Colony of Insane at Fitz-James in France, in 1880"; "A Contribution to the Subject of Nerve Stretching," 1882. The essay on "Statical Electro-Therapeutics," read before the New York Academy of Medicine, revived the use of frictional electricity as a curative agent in medicine, fallen into disuse in this country during the last fifty years. This form of electrization is now spreading over the entire country. Other articles on medical subjects have been published in various medical journals.

Visited Europe a second time in 1877, and a third time in 1880.

* GEORGE HENRY TRIPP.

Born in South Yarmouth, Mass., May 30, 1844. Died in Washington, D. C., April 8, 1880.

At the meeting of the Class on Commencement Day, 1880, the following sketch of his life and character, prepared by Ware, was read: —

Our classmate, GEORGE HENRY TRIPP, died of consumption on the eighth day of April, 1880, at Washington, D. C. He was born at South Yarmouth, Mass., May 30, 1844. He fitted for college at the Roxbury Latin School, graduating therefrom the first in his class. In college he received one or more prizes for excellence in scholarship or literary exercise, and delivered the salutatory at the Junior exhibition.

After graduating from college he taught school for some months with Mr. William H. Brooks, on Winter Street, in Boston. Studied law at the Harvard Law School and in the office of William Minot, Esq., in Boston. Was admitted to the bar of Suffolk County, September 24, 1869, and practised law in Boston from his admission to the bar up to the time of his death.

October 15, 1872, he married Rebecca Vandervoort, of Boston, the daughter of William and Mary F. Vandervoort. They had three children, all living at his decease, — viz., William Vandervoort Tripp, born July 21, 1873; Rebecca Vose Tripp, born April 27, 1877; and George Francis Tripp, born November 19, 1878. In the fall of 1877 Tripp spent a few months in Europe for the benefit of his health, which at that time had been failing for about a year. He received some benefit from this journey, but after some months the disorder, which was a disease of the lungs, showed alarming symptoms, and in the latter part of February last he started with his wife for Florida, hoping that the Southern climate might stay the progress of the disease. He remained a few days in Jacksonville and Savannah, and then went to Aiken, where he stayed about three weeks. Not receiving the anticipated benefit, and feeling that his strength was rapidly failing, he started North, hoping to reach home before his death. His weakness rapidly increasing, he was urged to leave the train at Richmond; but in his anxiety to reach home, he concluded to go on to Washington. At that place he was carried from the train to the hotel. Here the last thread of life was severed, and he expired a few moments after reaching his room.

Our classmate had an honorable ambition for success in the worthier objects of life, and his life was a noble struggle towards the attainment of these ends. In obtaining a college education, and afterwards in obtaining the knowledge necessary for his profession, he was dependent upon his own resources. But even while in the midst of his efforts for his own education and support, he was furnishing means for the education and support of others. The efforts of such a man can only be resisted by disease, and it is indeed sad for us to contemplate that this resisting power made itself so keenly felt during his life. Tripp was a man of convictions, which he was fearless to express when occasion demanded. While fond of music and the arts, he exercised a sound judgment in the practical affairs of life.

As is well known, he was the author of "Student Life at Harvard," which was published in the fall of 1876. It is a peculiarly difficult task to write a work descriptive of college life. Almost all its readers are qualified more or less to be critics thereof, and equally with the author are acquainted and familiar with incidents and events such as are therein described. But the plan of this work is ingenious, its descriptions are vivid, it discloses a deep insight into human nature, and in its creation our classmate has shown marked and brilliant talents as an author. At the time of his death he had in preparation a novel, of which his continued ill health prevented the completion. The unfinished manuscript has been examined by one of our class, and the subject is said to have been treated with considerable strength and originality. He was exceedingly fond of out-of-door life. Being energetic of character, he was vigorous in executing whatever was undertaken. He was singularly happy and fortunate in his domestic life; and though he suffered much from illness for several months before his death, his sufferings were mitigated by the attentions of a devoted wife. To her, appreciating as we do her great loss, we tender our kindest sympathies; and our desire is most earnest and sincere for the future welfare of the children deprived thus early in life of a father's care.

Our classmate's exertions and endeavors may, I think, have told upon his constitution and rendered it less able to withstand the inroads of a dangerous disease: but they also brought into exercise powers which showed his ability, generosity, and manhood. It is fortunate to be in possession of these qualities, and we sadly regret that he could not have lived the more fully to enjoy the benefits which their exercise would have secured.

Voted, That as a tribute of respect to our deceased classmate, this memorial be entered on the Class Records and a copy be sent to his widow.

FREDERIC TUDOR. Born 1845.

Sanitary engineer.

Address: 14 Pemberton Square, Boston.

SCHUYLER VAN RENSSELAER. Born 1845.

Consulting mining and metallurgical engineer.

In 1876 he went to Europe to investigate some chemical patents, and remained in Dresden from April, 1876, to May, 1877. Then resumed mining business in New York, and in August, 1878, went into the employ of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad as iron expert, in which business he is still engaged.

February 11, 1875, a son, George Griswold, was born.

Address: Box 54, New Brunswick, N. J.

CHARLES DAVID WADSWORTH. Born 1847.

Banker and stock broker in New York since January 1, 1882, of the firm of Wadsworth & White.

Address: 44 New Street, New York.

ELWYN WALLER. Born 1846.

Instructor in Quantitative Analysis in the School of Mines, Columbia College, since 1879. He was previously instructor in Qualitative Analysis.

Has published various reports to the New York Health Department on drinking water and other matters belonging to sanitary chemistry; "Report on Croton Water," being an investigation of the question of odors occurring in drinking water, for the New York Health Department (one of the most important of his reports), 1881; reports to the New York State Board of Health "On the Chemical Nature of Effluvia from some Manufacturing Operations," June, 1881, and "On the Results of Examinations of some Suspected Sources of Water Supply in the State of New York," 1881; reports to the National Board of Health on some disinfectants in the market, with Dr. C. F. Chandler, 1879, 1881.

One of the editors of the "School of Mines," a quarterly chemical and engineering periodical, published by students and graduates of the institution. Mr. F. A. Cairns, his colleague, died suddenly in 1879, leaving a manuscript nearly finished for a work on Quantitative Chemical Analysis. Waller revised and added to it and published it, the first edition in 1880, and a revised edition in 1881. This work has been adopted as a manual of instruction for students in several laboratories in the country.

In addition to societies already reported, is a member of the British Society of Public Analysts, 1880, and one of the vice-presidents of the American Chemical Society, 1882.

July 15, 1880, was married to Ella White, of New York.

April 7, 1881, a daughter, Edith, was born.

Address: School of Mines, Columbia College, New York.

HORACE EVERETT WARE. Born 1845.

EDWARD STICKNEY WOOD. Born 1846.

Professor of Chemistry in the Harvard Medical College.

Chemist of the Massachusetts General Hospital since 1873.

In May, 1880, attended at Washington, D. C., the national convention for the revision of the U. S. Pharmacopœia, as one of the delegates from the Massachusetts Medical Society (Davenport also a delegate), and at that convention was appointed one of a committee of twenty-five, called "The Committee of Revision and Publication of the Pharmacopœia of the United States of America, 1880." This committee will remain in existence until the next decennial convention in 1890, and the result of their labors will soon be in press under the title of "United States Pharmacopœia, Sixth Decennial Revision."

In 1879 was appointed by the special committee on water supply of the city of Cambridge, "to examine and report upon the water supply of Cambridge."

His publications since the last report have been: —

"Report on Water Supply of Cambridge," 1879; an article on "Toxicology" in supplement to Ziemssen's "Cyclopædia of the Practice of Medicine"; "Two Cases of Cystinuria," read before the Boston Society for Medical Observation, and published in the "Boston Medical and Surgical Journal," July, 1879; "The Average Daily Amount of Urine: Its Importance in Diagnosis," read before the Boston Society for Medical Improvement, and published in the "Boston Medical and Surgical Journal," January, 1881.

In addition to societies previously reported, he is a member of the American Pharmaceutical Association, September 9, 1879; associate member of the Boston Society for Medical Improvement, October 11, 1880; fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, October 8, 1879.

October 29, 1877, a daughter was born. She died November 5, 1877.

October 18, 1881, his wife died.

Address: Harvard Medical College, Boston.

WILLIAM WORTHINGTON. Born 1847.

Judge of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Until April 12, 1882, he was a member of the law firm of Wulsin & Worthington, when he was appointed by the governor of Ohio, judge as above, vice Hon. J. B. Foraker, resigned.

He was sworn in and took his seat on the bench, May 1, 1882. His term of office is until his successor is elected and qualified, which election takes place in April, 1883.

The following, which appeared in the "Cincinnati Law Bulletin and Reporter," has come to the Secretary's notice, and he ventures to insert it without consultation, that Judge Worthington's modesty might not prevent its being read by his classmates: —

"JUDGE WORTHINGTON, as he will now be known, is in his thirty-fifth year, having been born on the third day of August, 1847. He is the second son of Hon. Vachel Worthington, one of the most distinguished pioneers of the Cincinnati bar. In the fall of 1863 a 'five-leaved clover' from Cincinnati made its appearance at Harvard. It consisted of William Worthington, Bellamy Storer, Clement Bates, Landon Longworth, and Rufus King, Jr. They had been in the same class in Brooks's school, and entered the same class at Harvard. Of the five, Longworth and King are dead, and the other three are successful members of our bar. Worthington stood among the first ten in his class of ninety-four. He studied law in the office of his father, and was admitted to the practice in October, 1869. For the last four years he has been associated in the practice with Mr. Drausin Wulsin, the firm name being Wulsin & Worthington. Mr.

Worthington will be remembered as the leading spirit in the Dudley land suits, and in the somewhat celebrated tax cases of Worthington v. Sebastian, treasurer, and Humphreys, auditor, v. the City of Cincinnati.

"Mr. Worthington has been recognized by the bar of Cincinnati as a well-read, accurate, and conscientious lawyer; and upon the bench the same characteristics will make him an intelligent, careful, and impartial judge. His appointment seems to have given universal satisfaction."

August 3, 1879, a daughter, Louisa Skinner, was born.

Address: Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHARLES WYMAN. Born 1845.

Has been out of health since the last report.

Address: Care of Henry Whitman, 77 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston.

Address: Springfield, Mass.

*EDWARD LAW.

Died in Philadelphia, October 5, 1881.

The following notice is taken from the "Philadelphia Ledger" of October 6, 1881: —

"Hon. Edward Law, member of the Legislature from the Eighth District, was drowned while rowing on the Schuylkill, opposite the Zoölogical Garden landing, about half past five o'clock yesterday afternoon. Shortly before the sad occurrence, he was observed by parties who knew him proceeding up the river in a single-oared shell, and when a short distance above Girard Avenue Bridge, to turn and come down on the west side of the river. When about two hundred yards below the Zoölogical Garden landing, the shell was seen to suddenly capsize, throwing Mr. Law into the water. It is said that he boldly struck out for the shore, and after going some distance from the boat, returned with the evident design of bringing it in with him; but that before he reached it, it is supposed his strength gave out, as he sank and was not seen to come to the surface afterwards. Capt. Chasteau, of the Park Guard, almost immediately upon the occurrence of the accident ordered a boat's crew to his rescue; but they did not reach the spot in time, although his body was recovered by grappling irons within thirty minutes afterwards, and conveyed to the residence of his father, No. 1212 Walnut Street. Mr. Law, who was president of the University Barge Club, was a gentleman of fine physique and an expert swimmer, who had frequently demonstrated his courage and skill by rescuing several persons from watery graves at various seaside resorts.

"He was a son of Edward E. Law, Esq., — a distinguished member of the bar in former years, but now retired, — was born in this city, was unmarried, and about thirty-three years of age. After receiving his primary education at Fairies' school on Dean Street, below Walnut, in the neighborhood of his late residence, he entered the preparatory school at Andover, Mass., prior to beginning a collegiate course at Harvard College. At the latter institution he remained from 1863 to 1865, when he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania, which he left a month before graduation to accept a second lieutenantcy in the regular army. After nearly three years' service he resigned and completed his law course with James Parsons, Esq., on Third Street below Market, and was admitted to the bar in 1872, practising continuously since, with the exception of the time devoted to his legislative duties.

"Mr. Law has served three years of his two terms in the Legislature, having been elected first in 1878 for the session of 1879, and in 1880 for the term from January, 1881, to the end of December, 1882. During his service he has proved himself a thoroughly independent man, and consistent in his devotion to public interests as distinguished from that sort of service which conceives it to be the highest loyalty to serve mere party and the cliques of office-holders."

CLASS SUPPER FUND.

The following circular, issued in 1879, explains itself: —

Classmates, —

The general disappointment felt by members of the Class on Commencement Day, because the Class Supper had been given up, caused a spontaneous movement to provide means by which a similar occurrence might be avoided in future.

During the day a subscription paper was opened with the following heading: —

"We subscribe the amounts opposite our names yearly, for five years, towards the Class Fund; provided, however, that the Secretary give a Class Supper in 1880, and every three years thereafter."

It was understood that the subscription should be three or five dollars yearly, although several subscribed ten dollars. Twenty-five members present subscribed to the annual payment of $154, and the Secretary was requested to ask for subscriptions from classmates not present.

A small annual payment by a majority of the Class will secure to us the desired object, — not simply a Class Supper, but a reunion in which every member of the Class may join without one being debarred by pecuniary consideration.

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS H. LINCOLN,
Class Secretary.

54 Devonshire Street, Boston, June 27, 1879.

The total amount subscribed was		$1,200 38
